

Adopting Two Adult Cats

- Twice the love, twice the gratitude—and two lives saved instead of one!
- Double the joy by adopting TWO adults rather than just one! You'll not only save two lives, you'll bring twice the amount of unconditional love into your life.
- Although adult cats might not seem to require as much attention as their kitten counterparts, the reality is that all pets thrive when they receive lots of attention and stimulation—and they're more likely to get into trouble when they're bored. When you're at work all day or away from home for longer stretches for any reason, your cats will be happy to have companionship—each other!
- Cats are much less likely to engage in any destructive or other disruptive behaviors (scratching, biting, chewing, etc.) when they have another cat to socialize with; they provide each other with built-in exercise and playtime.
- Veterinary studies indicate that when cats share their homes with another cat, both cats are healthier. Just like people, animals with buddies are sick less often, have shorter hospital stays and live longer.
- Older cats have already developed their personalities, so you'll know if they prefer the company of other felines or not. Also, our adoption specialists are experts at knowing which cats do best together, so you won't be alone in making the perfect match!
